Volatility returns as markets consider longer lockdowns

◆ President Donald Trump backtracks on promises of lifting US lockdowns by mid-April.

◆ Number of cases continues to rise globally and more countries become stricter about social distancing.

◆ Brent crude drops as much as 9% amid news of full storage tanks and prospects of longer closures.

◆ Dollar index resumes rise after dropping all of last week, amid higher demand for US dollars to close quarter-end books.

◆ Treasuries extend their gains from Friday amid renewed demand for super liquid and safe assets while gold drops marginally, suggesting renewed margin call pressures.

◆ FAB AAC remains underweight in equities and overweight in gold.

Markets are starting the week in reality-check mode. US stock futures were fluctuating while European markets were mostly in the red, following a sell-off earlier in Asia. The negative tone came as investors grappled with a rising probability of longer lockdowns than initially expected.

The number of new cases across the globe and admissions by world leaders that they may have underestimated how long they had to ask people to stay home were feeding those fears. President Trump, for one, told reporters earlier today that his statement that the US would reopen by mid-April was "aspirational". His comments came as the number of dead from the virus surpassed 1,000 in New York state alone.

The US, Italy and Spain all now have more reported cases than China too. Meanwhile, China itself reported 31 new cases over the weekend (China only reports people who have been diagnosed with the virus and are sick, whereas the majority of people who have been infected do not show symptoms). This has prompted the country to backtrack on the recent relaxation of some of its social distancing measures, closing cinemas for instance. It has also raised fears of a second wave of infections in the country.

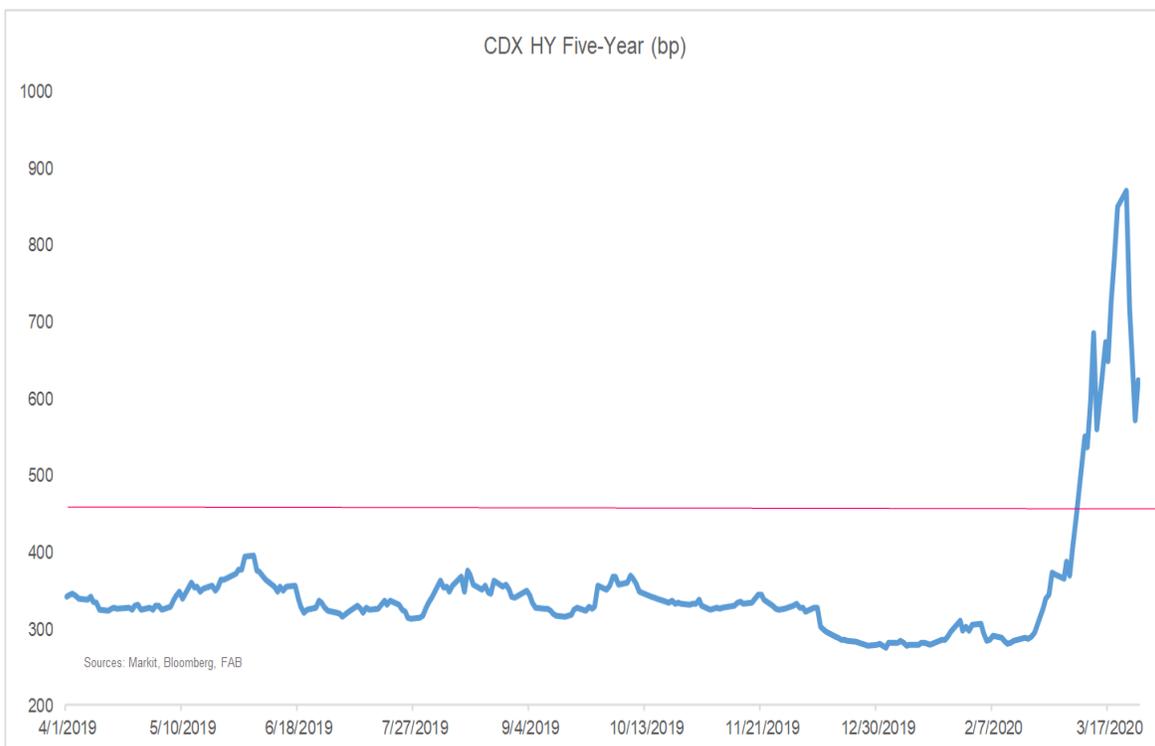

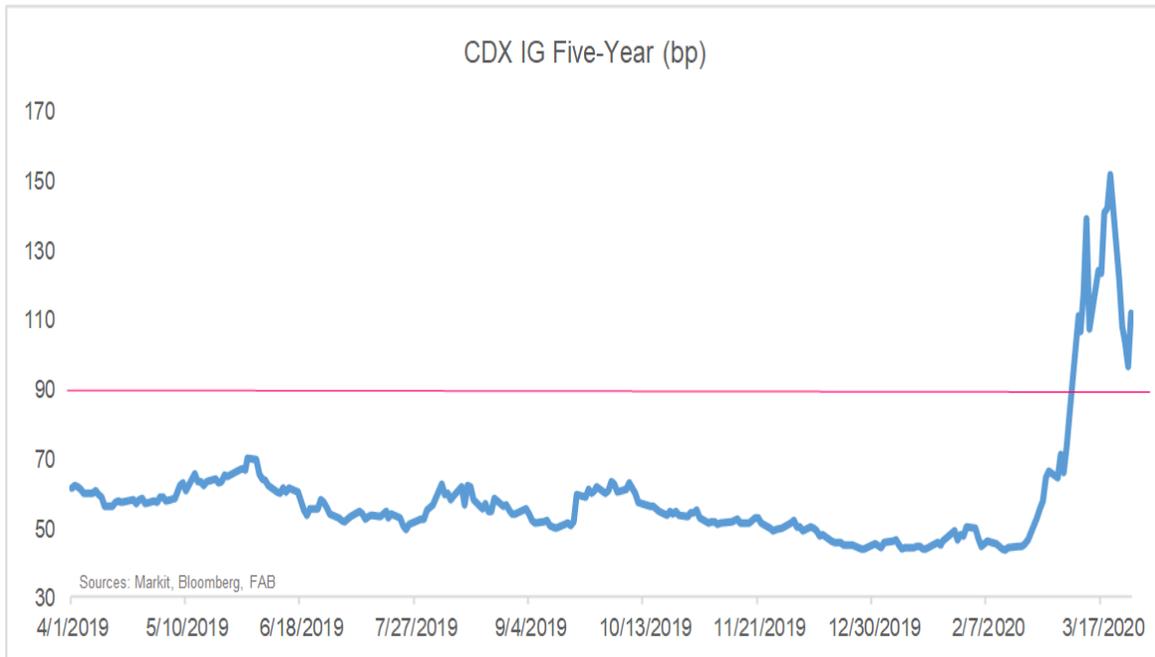

If most countries remain in lockdown for longer it will have a bigger impact on the global economy. Reflecting that, the Economist Intelligence Unit has revised its forecast for world growth in 2020 to a negative 2.2% from its original forecast of positive 2.3%. The think tank also reassessed its expectations for growth in China to 1% from 5.9%, in Germany to minus 6.8% from 0.9% and in the US to a negative 2.8% from a positive 1.7%.

Italy, Spain and the US all surpassed China in number of reported Covid-19 cases

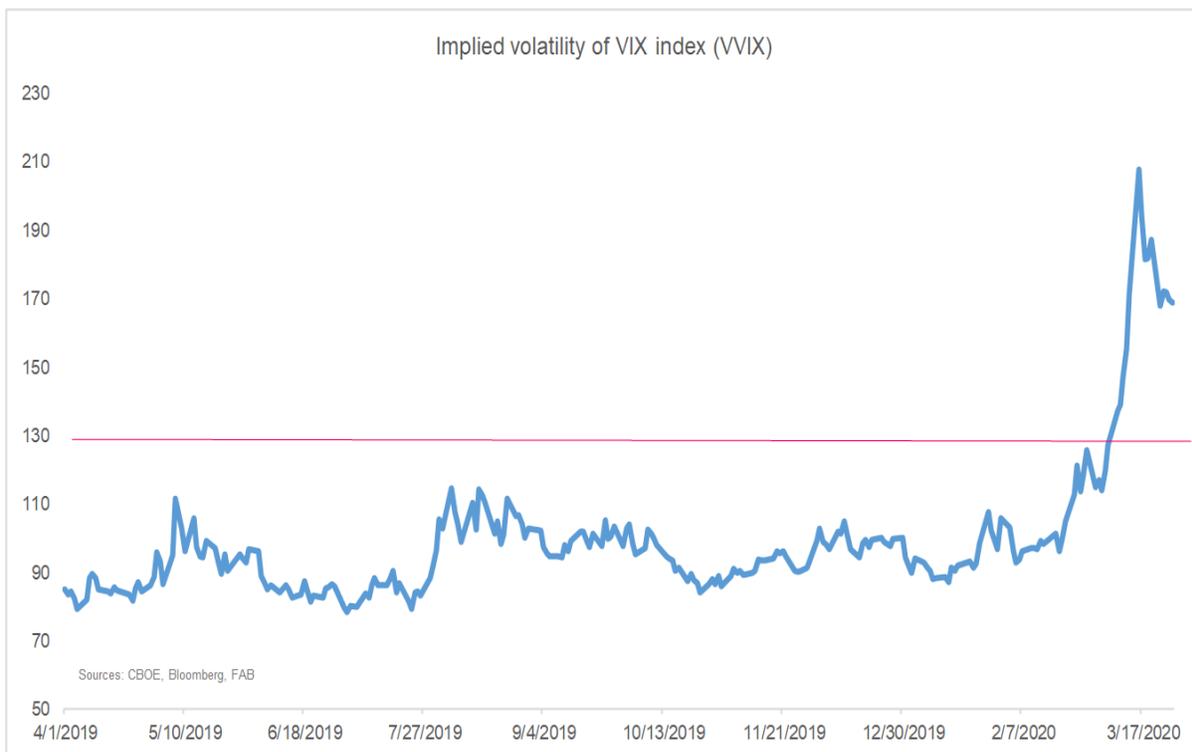

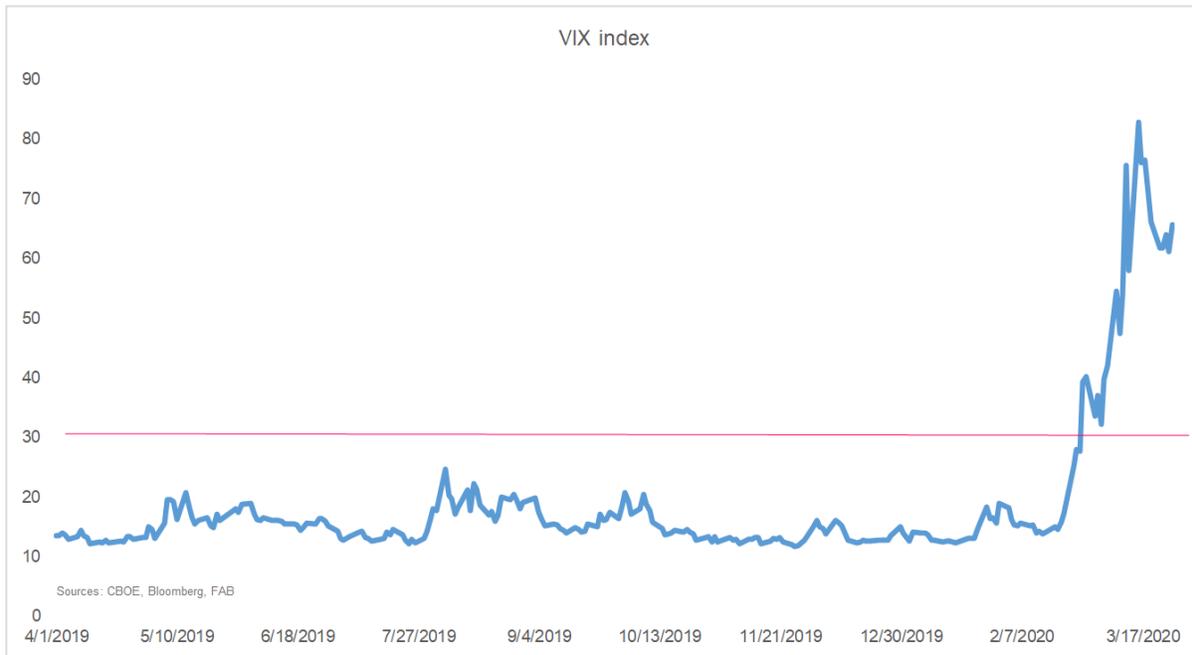

Such bad economic news may not be fully priced into current markets, particularly given the fact that analysts are yet to revise earnings forecasts meaningfully. That process is likely to only happen properly once first quarter numbers come in, which starts next week.

However, it is not all bad news. Bank of America Merrill Lynch today said that a sentiment model they have was at the most bearish in history, which usually is a buy signal. Similarly, the average amount of cash held by funds that responded to the lender's monthly survey was at 5.1%, a level considered very high. All that cash could boost markets once it is deployed. However, it is likely to stay on the sidelines until investors can go out for meetings.
