With uncertainty still running high, the FAB AAC stays put

◆ The FAB Asset Allocation Committee (FAB AAC) decided to maintain its underweight position in equities.

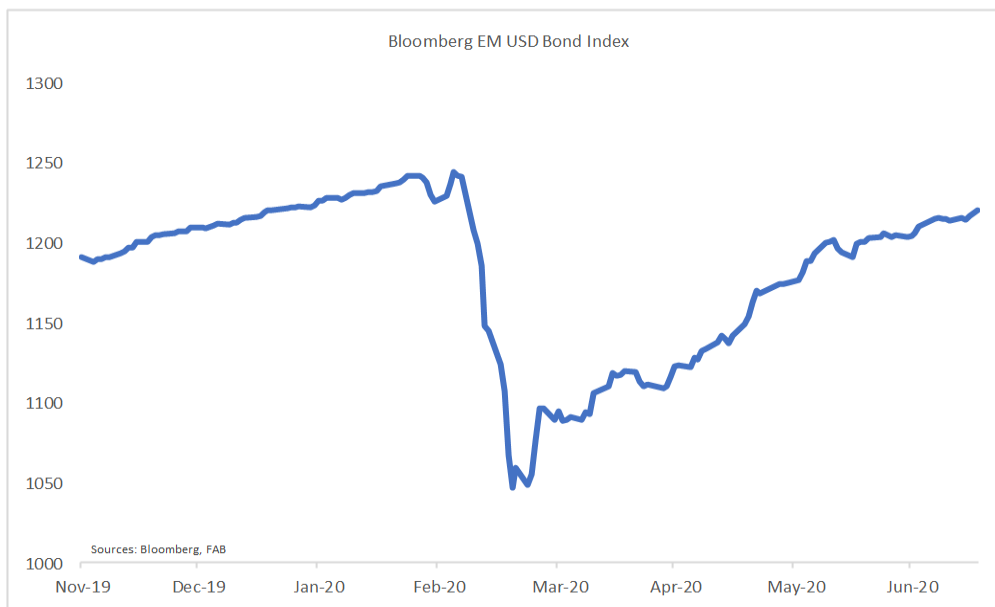

◆ Overweight position in gold kept as the metal seems to still have momentum and has performed well its main purpose in model portfolios of hedging them against volatility.

◆ Slight overweight in EM dollar debt and corporate investment grade bonds have also performed well and remain promising.

◆ The FAB AAC has also kept the level of cash higher than usual in expectations that uncertainties could prompt a correction and provide a better entry point for risk assets.

The FAB Asset Allocation Committee (FAB AAC) decided to keep its current biases in a virtual meeting today. While members were aware that low rates for longer and a rising pile of cash in the world could help support risk asset performance in the long run, the long list of uncertainties facing investors in the coming months prevailed to convince the FAB AAC that it was better to take a careful approach for now.

Among the risks that members pointed at are the probability of renewed lockdowns in response to rising Covid-19 cases and their impact on a nascent economic recovery. Indeed, today Los Angeles mayor Eric Garcetti warned that the second most populous city in the US was on the brink of a new lockdown as the number of cases there spiked. Similarly, Greece tightened restrictions at its land borders and Hong Kong added restrictions after cases increased.

Such stops and starts could provide for an uneven economic recovery and are likely to impact the performance of risk assets, members argued. To be sure, the FAB AAC members agreed that interest rates are likely to remain low for a long time, and therefore risk assets are likely to find support. A wall of cash is also likely to come in if there is a significant sell-off.

That prospect generated a debate around the idea of reducing the overweight position in gold and moving the equities allocation to neutral. While members were generally in favour of that move, the disagreement was about timing. Some members thought better to wait for an entry opportunity before enacting the change while others thought that opportunity may not present itself so soon.

Ultimately, the camp of caution prevailed, especially given the fact that the current asset allocation has some risk asset overweights that are compensating for lagging performance in equities.

The FAB AAC's overweight in EM dollar bonds has helped returns with less volatility

Indeed, the overweight position in emerging market dollar bonds and US corporate investment-grade debt were kept. Those allocations have helped the model portfolios of FAB to recover most of the losses from the March sell-off but with much lower volatility than a higher allocation to equities would have provided.

Finally, the overweight position in gold was also kept as the metal seems poised to continue its bull run. Members cited the fact that investor demand for gold has been so strong that its prices continued to rise in the past few months even as jewelry production, the biggest industrial source of demand for the yellow metal, ground to a halt. Besides, gold continues to work as a good hedge against volatility, and there could be more of that coming.
